Down a rabbit hole

I have always thought outside the box. Unlike many people, familiarity was not a comfortable place for me. I needed to keep moving, changing and challenging the norms along the way.

I find people like to imitate the home designs they know and feel familiar with. Often when I first meet my clients in their homes I think wow, how can I enlighten them and guide them to find a new perspective.

Each new project brings me to a rabbit hole like Alice, in Alice in Wonderland. Alice falls down a rabbit hole to find new meaning in life and a different perspective. I think of myself as Alice guiding clients down the rabbit hole, knowing eventually clients will find new meaning in their living experience.

What could matter more than how and where you live providing those creature comforts are available to you.

I remember my first experience of sitting in a L-Shaped sofa. It was the warmest and most inviting experience. My friends and I all piled onto the sofa hand and arm, arm and leg; all feeling the closeness to each other and warmth. We spent hours on the sofa watching fabulous movies and TV shows. I never wanted to leave that wonderful place. I took that experience with me in design.

An interior designer's obligation to the client is to enlighten them and have them realize that the furniture you choose can actually bring more closeness and love to your family. Seating arrangements matter.

So follow me into my rabbit hole and view my warm & loving family room layouts that allow you to lean in and on your family.
